

How the leopard gets his spots

By: Alberta Sarfo

Leonard the Leopard

One day, ^{in the} burning-hot savanna there lived a leopard called Leonard. His fur was super sandy, and his eyes shone bright as an emerald. One morning he woke up with a large roarer in his stomach. In the distance, he could spot a beehive. He licked his lips and ran as fast as lightning towards the beehive. Once he arrived there, he hid behind the swaying ~~plant~~ ^{parky} trees waiting to attack his prey. The ~~queen~~ ^{queen} bee and her bees had to gather some ~~pollen~~ ^{pollen} from flowers. This was a ~~great~~ chance for Leonard to steal some honey from the bees. He started licking the honey until his tongue got stuck. When the bees returned they noticed that their beehive was missing. Behind the bushes, Leonard was holding the beehive in his ~~claws~~ ^{claws} with his tongue still in it. He attempted to run away, but he accidentally stepped on a tree branch. The bees heard him and came swarming ^{towards} ~~towards~~ him. ~~The~~ ~~the~~ bees including ^{the} queen ~~bee~~ used their stingers to sting Leonard. He received black dots on his body.
